Each game gets its own look

MobSlop · 15 October 2026 · the same model and the same instructions the Skin a game button sends

These two people are stand-ins, not a real locker. Nia is a black bob and round glasses. Reed is a red beard and a knit cap. Each photo was edited with `grok-imagine-image-2.0`, the same call the server makes after you tap the button. Bubble asked for a toy ball. Muggin asked for two sheets of a full painted fighter, twelve poses each. Downbeat asked for an ink face. Small Prix asked for a clay face. The games below were drawn by the real renderers, not a mock.

> The skinned version stays on that phone, and on a link the patron sends. It is not a cabinet on the floor.

The photos

Nia, the photo the edits started from.

Reed, the photo the edits started from.

Bubble

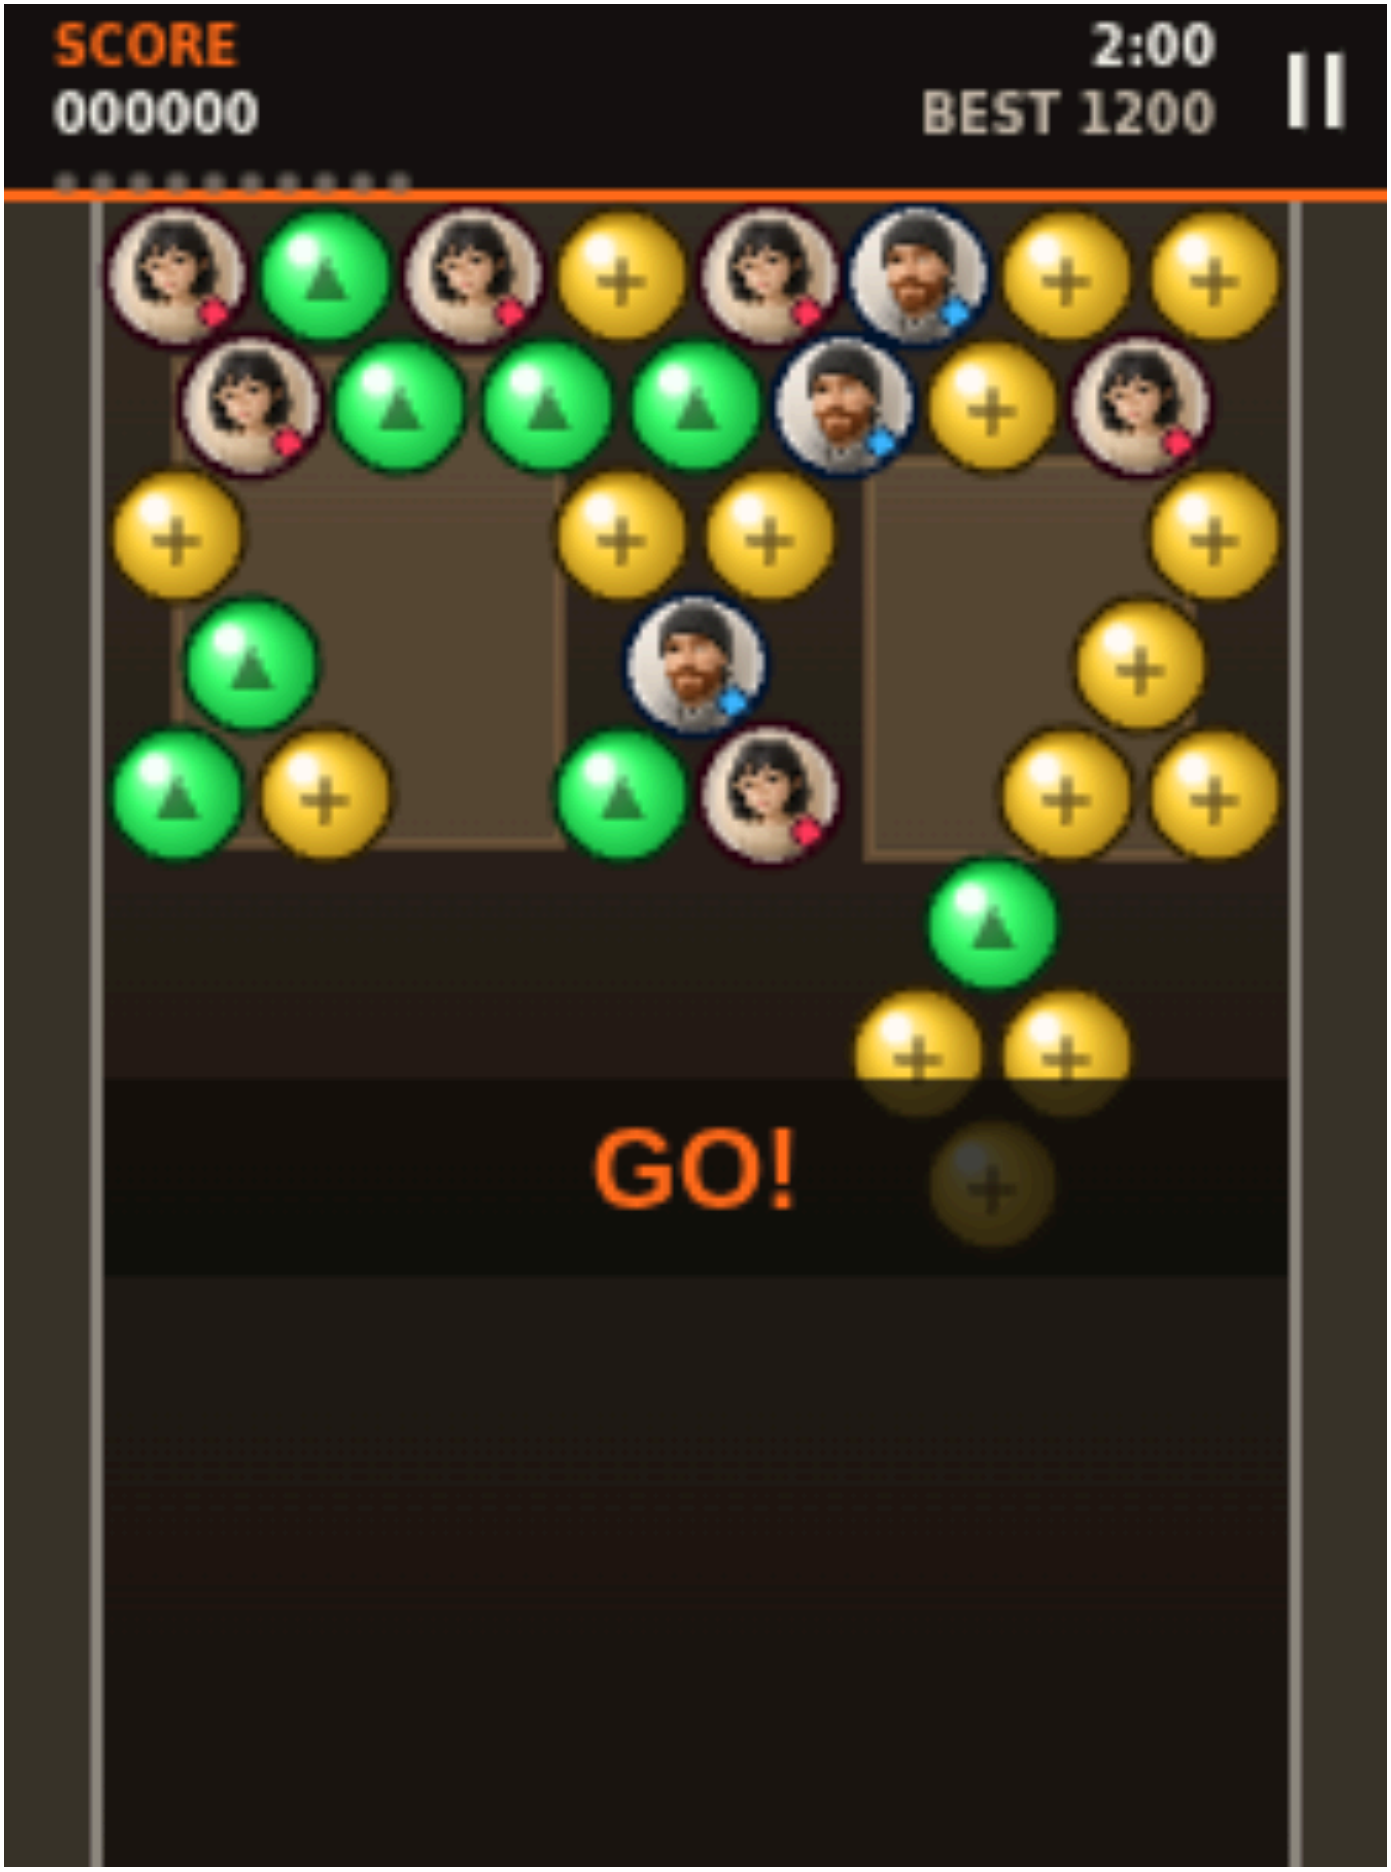

Make a ball. The board clips that still into the token. Only the first two colours were filled here, so the rest stay stock. Aim and match do not change.

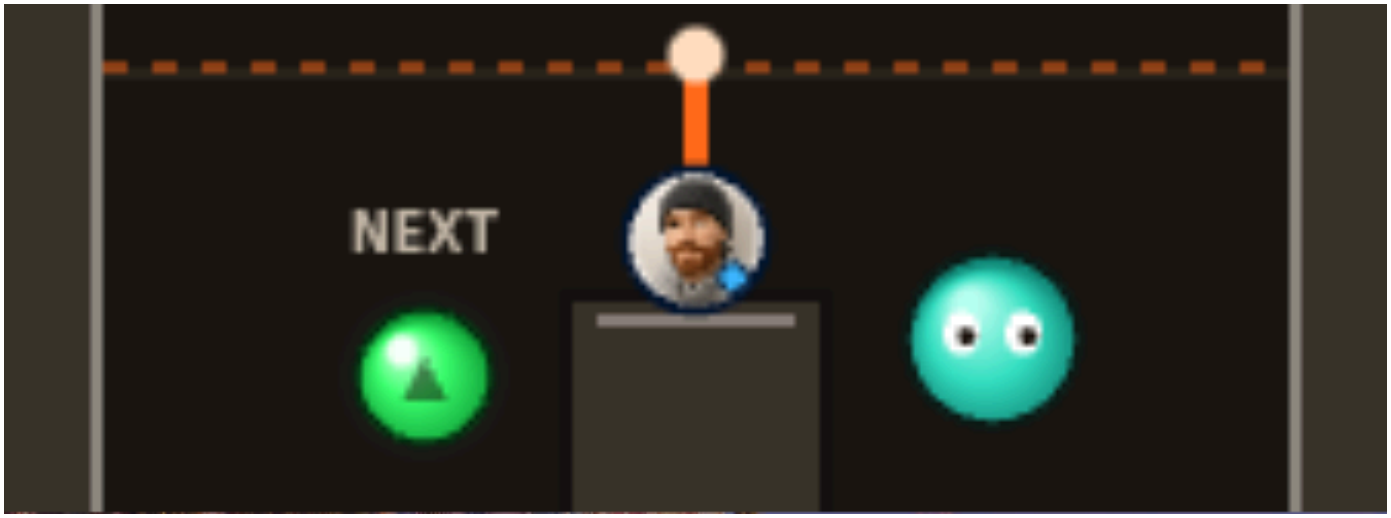

Nia’s ball. Glasses, bob, sweater, built into the sphere.

Reed’s ball. Beard, cap, hoodie.

A played board. Nia and Reed are two colours. The plain balls are stock.

Muggin

Paint this fighter. The model was told to draw the person as a full-body painted fighter, twelve poses on a sheet, then twelve more, on a flat magenta ground. The game cuts each sheet into those twelve cells and plays them. The moves stay. Mina is Nia. Sol is Reed. Nico and Marlow were left stock, and they are not in this fight.

Nia’s first sheet. Idle, walk, jump, crouch, strikes, block, throw, hurt, down, win.

Reed’s first sheet, same order.

The fight, idle. Both are whole characters in the sunset stage, not ball cards. A scrap of a neighbouring pose sits between them: a limb that crossed a cell line got kept with the idle cell.

The same fight with Nia on her strike pose. Reed stays in his stance. The pose changed because the sheet has one.

Downbeat

Draw this face. The body, the steps, and the street stay. The head is an ink drawing of that person. Pearl is Nia. The Suit is Reed.

Nia, ink.

Reed, ink.

The opening street. The faces are those drawings, clipped to the head. The rest of the character is the stock dancer.

Small Prix

Sculpt this face. The car, the hat, and the race stay. The driver gets a clay face. The flat pink ground behind the face is punched out so it is not a photo card. You are Nia, in the yellow car. Reed is in the pink car.

Nia, clay.

Reed, clay.

The race, through the game’s own renderer. The faces are the clay sculpts. The hats and the cars were not redrawn.
